DAILY REFLECTION

At the U.S. Olympic trials, Sean McGorty was running comfortably in the 3,000-meter steeplechase until another runner stepped on the back of his right foot, ripping down the heel of his shoe. He peeled away from the pack, stopped, and put his shoe back on. Then, rather than sprinting hard to catch up, he made up the distance a little every lap, finishing well enough to keep his Olympic hopes alive.

"What we demonstrate today, tomorrow, and the next day, is not as important as the tendency which our thought is taking. If every day things are a little better, a little more harmonious; if each day we are expressing more life, we are going in the right direction." - Ernest Holmes, The Science of Mind
